Competition-Based Learning: A Model for the Integration of Competitions with Project-Based Learning

Abstract. In an effort to enhance the learning process in higher education, a new model for Competition-Based Learning (CBL) is presented. The new model utilizes two well-known learning models, namely, the Project-Based Learning (PBL) and competitions. The new model is also applied in a networked environment with emphasis on collective learning as well as collective outcomes. The new model, which is referred to as CBL, provides educators with an alternative solution to overcome many of student's deficiencies associated with traditional learning practices; such as lack of motivation, lack of self esteem, insufficient practical and real-life experience, and inadequate team work practices. The new CBL model makes a

Note: Because you are submitting this paper for a non-enrolled student (a student who is not a user and not enrolled in your class), this paper will be available for your use only, and will not be available for use with collaborative learning products such as Peer Review and GradeBook. If you are planning on using these products, please make sure (1) your students are all enrolled in your class and submit papers themselves, or (2) the papers you submit are for students who are properly enrolled.
